BY MRS. A. B. STANLEY.

Pon't sit by your fireside, lamenting, And sighing o'er what might have been for magnify some misdemeanor Till it swells to a mountain of sin.

A poor thing to borrow is trouble.

Then take the world just as you find it.
And do not look forward with dread.
Lest you lose half the heaven-sent blessing
Designed to rest down on your head—
Lest you pass by the beautiful lilies
Which angels have streen in your way,
Lest you see not the gloricus runshine
That makes the bright, beautiful day.

We lose half the joys of a lifetime,
(And this is the lesson 1'd teach),
In grasping for things in the distance,
So very far out of our reach.
Botter take, from the hand of our Father,
The blessings that come every day—
And these, with sweet love and contentment,
Will washe our live harms allow.

TO HELEN. It was a wild, sequestered spot On the bank of the Bois Dore Whose rushing waters tarried not
In their race for St. Louis Bay.
And there sat by the side of the yellow street
A fisherman bearded and broad of beam,
And he angled for perch with skill supreme
The whole of that summer's day.

Or the water too muddy. I ween, For never a perch flapped his silvery tail On the bank where the fisher was seen-Not a bite, not a sign of a nibble to show That here in the depths of the broad layon Was perch, or pike, or pompane. Or garfish pearly green.

As the yellow sun was going down
To the sound of the marsh hen's cry.
The fisherman's brow was marked with a frow And his broad breast heaved with a sigh—
For his hook was fast in a hidden crag.
A water-logged bough, or the root of a flag
Such as wave where the naiads lie.

And wish delicate care essayed to save
His dipsy and hook from the stream.
Twas delicate care and delicats tounh,
flut more than a little was much too much;
A jerk too many, a pull too strong.
And prone on his back he lay along,
With prickly prongs of cactus plants
That pierced the linen of blonse and pants
In band and body and seam.

Did he rave and tear his shaggy hair,
As men are wont to do?
This fisherman—did he curse and swear
Until the air was blue?
Far from it. One brawny hand he taid
On port side aft, where many a blade
Of eachy had sone through. of cactus had gone through;
The other he slowly raised a loft
As he heaved a heavy sigh,
And then, in accents sad and soft,
"Helen Blazes!" I heard him cry.
